

First thought

The question I choose is "How do the features of the island shape the boys's behavior?" The reason why I choose this question is, in this book there are a lot of boys in it. Each boy they have the difference kind of behavior. The author put so many evidence that shows these boys's behavior. Everyone have their own type behavior. The difference kind of identities shows the different behavior. The different behavior will make so many conflict between them. I think everyone's different behavior is the important clue that promote the story-line.

The chunks I will mainly focus is the part of describe the boys. It is very details, and it is in everywhere from the book. The whole book are focus on these boys. I will look more careful on the sentence that talked by each boys, and all the word that author try to use to describe them. All clue they are scatter around in the sentence of the book. The people's behavior can be find in anyway. In the island, there are so many element that can effect the boy's opinion. For example, some boys they go to hunt the pig, but some boys they did't. This important incident in this book shows the boys's different behavior. The different behavior will let the kids make the different decision, and these decision will effect the different ending. I can probably see the summary to solidify the evidence I give is right or wrong. Behavior always effect somethings, whether is big or little.

In my book report, I will focus on the words behavior. There are so many features of the behavior, and I will analyze them, and tell you that different people's have the different behavior, and then I will tell you the reason. I will find some incident, and analyze why does different people do not agree with it, and what did they do in that incident. There are so many incident in Lord of the flies, but I will choose the important one, that one is the clue of the whole book.

Hey Laila, it seems that you have closely observed the various features of the boys on the island. Here are some more questions for you to further develop your thinking:

1. What are the features of the island?
2. What are the connections between the features of the island and the features of the boys' behaviour?
3. Think about what kind of theory can you refer to here to support your argument.
